In text citations

- An in text citation should follow anything that was found during your research.

You'll use them...

- after direct quotes.
- after you've paraphrased something.
- after any paragraph that's mentioned findings from a source.

- Pretty much all the time. If it feels like you're citing a little too often, you're probably on the right track.

How to cite

- Most often a citation follows this format
(Author, Year).
 - Ex. (Brooks, 2012).
 - The year is the year that the resource was published.
 - The citation is part of the sentence so the period goes after the citation.

Common Citations

- 2 Authors
 - List both authors in the same order that the resource had them.
 - Ex.
(Brooks & Paradise, 2010).
- 3-6 Authors
 - List all of the authors the first time. Then for all following citations, list just the first with “et al.” after.
 - Ex.
(Brooks et al., 2009)

Common web page citations

No author with no date.

- Write some of the page's title and n.d.
- Ex.
(Shutterstock, n.d.)

Author but still no date

- Write the author, but still use n.d.
- Ex.
(Brooks, n.d.)

Final notes about citations

Avoid using direct quotes, but if you use them, include the page number or paragraph where found.

- Ex. (Coleman, 2004, p. 112)

If the author is mentioned within the sentence, the citation doesn't need an author. In this case, the citation can also happen in the middle of the sentence.

- Ex. According to Coleman (2004), this tutorial is over.
- Ex. According to Coleman, this tutorial is over (2004).

Are you ready to test your knowledge?

- I hope you've taken good notes.
